

My Autograph

Make at least six copies and help your child write her name periodically (or once a year on her birthday).

Many two-year-olds love drawing, and holding markers and crayons prepares them for writing. You can help children under two make a simple handprint on the page. Older kids may scribble or draw lines or shapes that, to them, look like letters. As three and four-year olds' fine motor skills develop, they may begin to copy letters, and by age five or six, kids may be able to write their full names.

Staple the pages together to create an autograph book.
